

Poaceae gastropod

Poaceae gastropod
Poaceae gastropod

Hosted by: Mara Varelaki

Project Information (EN)

Water carriers

The water carries are snails and they absorb the morning dew drops, grass and flower seeds as they crawl in the meadows and forests. When the snails die and their flesh rots away, the seeds sprout and herbage emerge from within the hollow shells. (The water carriers are earthenware sculptures casted from snail shells. They appear in different contexts and projects representing inertia and the resilience of memory.)

Projectinformatie (NL)

Available only in English.

The water carries are snails and they absorb the morning dew drops, grass and flower seeds as they crawl in the meadows and forests. When the snails die and their flesh rots away, the seeds sprout and herbage emerge from within the hollow shells. The water carriers are earthenware sculptures casted from snail shells. They appear in different contexts and projects representing inertia and the resilience of memory .

Image List

| Filename            | Caption | Credit        |
|---------------------|---------|---------------|
| mara_1634038569.jpg |         | Mara Varelaki |

The images above are included in the ZIP under /images.